Voting Rights and Voter Suppression

RI Secretary of State Gregg Amore

The right to vote is one of the most important rights we have as American citizens. However, for many Americans, it has been a long struggle to earn what is taken for granted today. Rhode Island Secretary of State Gregg Amore--a former high school civics teacher--offers the lesson.

11:00 AM to 12:00 PM

Polarization in American Politics

K. Sonder

'Polarization' has become a buzzword; we hear how politically polarized the American public is from our politicians, the media, and our friends and family. But how polarized are we really? In this workshop, we'll explore the various factors of political polarization in the United States, adding nuance to a generally over-simplified narrative.

Lunch and Discussion of Wellness

R. Dubee

Taking care of yourself is part of being a leader. We'll talk about some strategies to help you do just that.

The Story of America

C. Woodard

America is not like a lot of other nation-states. As a people we're not unified by a shared ethnicity, religion or language. In fact, we're united by the story we tell ourselves about our founding. Best-selling author Colin Woodard will guide us through a consideration of what that story of America is in 2024.

Transition BreakTransport*Newport Harbor Sail

Newport in the summer is a city of sails. We'll enjoy a summer cruise in Narragansett Bay on the schooner Adirondack.

Stakeholder Engagement
J. Ludes

Accomplishing anything politically requires an understanding of who the stakeholders are on any given issue--the people with something to lose depending on outcomes--and a plan to engage them productively. In this session, we'll consider a case study about stakeholders and consider how that might be applicable in other fields.

Understanding Polling
K. Sonder

Polls are ubiquitous in modern politics--from the horse-race polling that dominates the media to more sophisticated surveys that shine light on public attitudes to complex issues. In this session, you'll gain a deeper understanding of what makes a poll "good" and what makes it less reliable.

Project and Research
Continue development and research of your policy proposal.

A Politics that Includes

If you've learned anything this week, we hope it's this: that a politics that includes other people is the most effective kind of politics to practice. We'll reflect on that with some insights from the past week.
